WELCOME TO VOL. 5 OF PASSPORT WINTER PARK

POODLES AND TIGERS AND ART, OH MY! Turn the page and the journey begins with cover artist Juan Travieso, whose paintings give voice to the powerless and endangered species on our planet. His most recent work, "The Paramount," is a tribute to the Javan tiger, an extinct subspecies that inhabited the island of Java until the mid-1970's. Visit the Cornell Fine Arts Museum on the Rollins College campus to see "Lonesome George" by Juan, and the pairing of contemporary photography with classic European portraits.

Explore the diverse culinary scene, from fresh sushi at UMI to a classic burger at 310 Park South or brunch at Cask & Larder, named one of Esquire Magazine's "Best New Restaurants in America." Indulge your sweet tooth at PeterBrooke Chocolatier and stroll through "Art on the Green," an outdoor sculpture exhibition in Central Park.

Shopping is a sport in Winter Park! Update your look from head to toe with chic eyewear, fine jewelry, fashion forward clothing, shoes and boots. Reserve some time for a spa treatment at one of the many day spas now offering a variety of beauty services. Take your Passport Winter Park with you and get busy!

WILL ARRIVE IN
SPRING/SUMMER 2016

JUAN TRAVIESO, is an artist based in Miami and New York and was born in Havana, Cuba. His work explores notions of impermanence and decay through a combined language of pop, realism, and abstraction. His figures, humans or animal, are broken up into spaces and forms much like 3d models, speaking to both their temporality and transition into the digital age. He is a graduate of New World School of the Arts, Art Center College of Design, and The Museum School of Fine Arts. His work has been exhibited nationally and internationally and is included in multiple collections across the world including at the Alford Inn and the Orlando Museum of Art.

AT HOME WITH MICHAEL MENNELLO

"If I could give one thing to future generations, it would be an appreciation for art." For Michael Mennello, these are words to live by. Philanthropist, business owner and long-time Winter Park resident, he has lived a life filled with a passion for art, entertaining and social responsibility.

"I was fortunate to have parents who were art lovers, and I learned to appreciate art at an early age," Michael says. "The acquisition and enjoyment of art has enriched my life in so many ways."

Michael purchased his first piece of art at age 16, an original work by the Italian Baroque artist Guido Rene. "I would encourage all parents to get their children involved with art at an early age," he says. "Even if you only have $10 to spend, buy what you can relate to, and over time you will find a sense of balance."

"If I could give one thing to future generations, it would be an appreciation for art."

"Afternoon on the Beach" by Frederick Carl Frieseke

Over the course of three decades, Michael and his late wife Marilyn cultivated a body of work focused primarily on impressionist paintings from the early 20th century. The collection then expanded to include a number of Modernist works, and their appreciation for American Modernist Earl Cunningham lead to the acquisition of the artist's entire collection. The creation of the Mennello Museum of American Art in 1998 provided the couple with an opportunity to share their favorite pieces with the public, with some works on permanent display at the museum, and others rotated between museum and the Mennello home. The collection, which has grown to some 400 pieces, now includes several significant contemporary paintings and sculptures. Among Michael's personal favorites are canvases by George Bellows and John Sloan.

The philanthropic efforts for which the Menellos have long been known will continue through the Marilyn Logsdon Mennello Fund. This foundation was established to benefit the Mennello's namesake museum, along with additional causes dear to their hearts. "I think it's important to give back," Michael says. Among the benefactors of the foundation will be animal welfare groups, a program to provide needed medications to the poor, and art education programs and scholarships.

"I'd love to see more young people majoring in art," Michael says. "Society rewards those who amass fame or fortune, but sometimes lacks an understanding of what art can bring to the public good, and what it could mean to young children. Collecting shouldn't be seen as an elite activity. It's something that can be enjoyed by all, at every level."

Mayor Steve Leary

THE HOMETOWN ADVANTAGE

“Winter Park is the best place to live—or visit.” So says mayor Steve Leary. “In addition to the city’s natural beauty—the parks, the tree-lined brick streets, the chain of lakes—there’s a wealth of unique dining and shopping opportunities, an extensive roster of cultural activities, excellent museums and galleries and a world-class college [Rollins]. And yet, at the same time, there’s still the charm of an authentic small town.” In fact, Leary says, it is the residents who truly make Winter Park special. “We have a healthy and robust senior population, along with new and young families moving into our area. The city is now seeing some exciting changes that will further enhance the quality of life.” Regarding SunRail, “it has been a wonderful addition to our community,” Leary says. “It not only allows residents to commute, but also provides visitors with convenient access to our downtown.” And while Park Avenue remains a favorite destination, other areas such as Hannibal Square and the Lee Road and Fairbanks Avenue corridors are also seeing a new wave of revitalization. “Winter Park is important to the overall identity of Central Florida,” Leary says. “We provide a unique hometown appeal in the midst of one of the most rapidly developing regions in the country.”

Love Life,
Maria Cristina
Carbonell, 2011

The shaded lawns of Central Park provide an ideal setting for Art on the Green. The latest iteration of Winter Park's biennial outdoor sculpture exhibition will feature the works of artists with ties to Florida. "The selection of objects is aimed at highlighting the natural beauty of Central Park and engaging audiences of all ages," says guest curator Suzanne Delehanty. The seven artists to be featured are Lydia Azout, Maria Cristina Carbonell, Robert Chambers, Edouard Duval Carrie, Emmett Moore, Cristina Lei Rodriguez and Frances Trombly. Each has roots in Miami, and has earned national and international recognition for their creations. Their individual works encompass a broad spectrum of styles, mediums and approaches. The exhibition, which is open to all and free of charge, will run from November 1, 2015, through March 1, 2016, concurrent with park hours. Visitors can begin their outdoor sculpture tour at the Central Park Rose Garden, located near the intersection of Park and New England Avenues, or from anywhere in the park.
